The burden which we carry.

Moments of transformation in Latin America have brought about a range of emotional and physical consequences that future generations are forced to bear for centuries. Such violent and abrupt changes affect both the transformers and the transformed. The chemical reaction unleashed as the old and new merge into a completely new entity fosters a kind of social consciousness often unrecognizable from its origins. One must imagine a spectrum of emotions unleashed into the newly formed reality—hate, love, envy, despair, courage, fear, and hope—all dancing together like whimsical creatures around a fiery pit. And in this chaotic process, one must understand that no paradise is ever truly lost or found; paradise is in a constant state of change, the consequences of which we all must bear—sometimes pleasant, sometimes sad.
